7 WAYS TO MAKE THE MOST OF YOUR DOCTORS VISIT

Your relationship with your doctor is all about your health, of course, but it's also about mutual trust, communication and understanding. The better you two get along, the more satisfying your relationship is, and that's good for your health.

1. "Hey, Look at me." - If your doctor is not, try saying, "I'd feel more comfortable if you looked at me while we talked."
2. Try good manners. -The more you and your doctor relate to each other on a personal level, the more satisfied you'll both be. And that's healthier for you, too.
3. Be the squeaky wheel. -You may feel uncomfortable about suggesting an appointment with another doctor, but it's a reasonable request and it's better for both of you that you propose it rather than leave the office feeling annoyed.
4. Make your priorities clear.—It's important to have valuable conversations with your doctor.
5. How can I reach you? -Get in touch with your doctor, and stay in contact.
6. Start with your main concern. -Start the conversation at your next appointment with the problem that concerns you most, rather than listing all of them at once.
7. Provide some background. -Your doctor should have all of your current medical history at all times.
